

teresa.espinosa22 In the last two days, my name has been circulating in the Hollywood gossip "news," and I was asked for comment by Us Weekly and TMZ.

My comment is this:

I had the lovely honor of dancing for and with @britneyspears during the In The Zone promo that turned into The Onyx Hotel Tour.

At the time (2003 to 2004), I felt the chaotic energy that was Britney's life just by being in proximity to her. Paparazzi were in full effect everywhere she went. She couldn't breathe or sneeze without someone trying to capture a moment of her beautiful soul.

At the time, I didn't have the words to explain my experience with her. I could see and feel that she was lost, with the world watching her every move. From my perspective, all she wanted was to be normal.

I remember one day she told me she bought a box of hair dye and colored her own hair. I thought how funny that was because most people I knew in the industry loved getting their hair done by a professional.

I took that as her just wanting a version of a regular, normal life. (Of course, I'm speculating, but that's what I felt from her.)

One night, I invited Britney to go with my friend Kara and me to Joseph's. It was THE club to go to in that era.

We were frantically chased by paparazzi the whole way to the club. The drive was dangerous and super crazy, with them boxing us in on all sides of my car while desperately trying to get a picture of her.

We finally made it to the club, and the promoter immediately let us in. Soon after we entered, I saw my friend Kevin Federline. At the time, Kevin and I lived in the same quadruplex, and he just happened to be there that night.

When I saw Kevin, I thought, "Kevin is cute. I should introduce them." I'm not exactly sure how that innocent introduction turned into more than just a simple hang, and that's not my story to tell.

I feel blessed to have shared the stage with her all over the world. She allowed me to live my dreams as a professional dancer and eventually asked me to choreograph the "Outrageous" music video, which was never fully completed because she hurt her knee on set.

teresa.espinosa22 8h

And so here's my take:

NO ONE will EVER know what it's been like to walk second in her shoes.

Day 9/28 #messengers2025

#britneyspears

#professionaldancer #tourlife

#dancer #choreographer #tmz

#usweekly #mycomment 