Tell me if this makes sense. My son had diabetes, Addison's disease, and alpha one anti-trypsin deficiency, and he had no medical insurance, but he had a life insurance policy taken out on him. His dad bought five cars in the last six months but couldn't pay for medical insurance. He brags about how much money he has and has the nerve to make a GoFundMe to help bury him when he was just going to cremate him anyway because it was the cheapest, plus he had the life insurance policy. His death could've been prevented. He should have had a Dexcom/glucose monitor that alerted when his sugar was going up or down to a dangerous level. In our custody order, he was supposed to have medical insurance on our kids; that was part of our agreement. That just doesn't sit right with me, and I brought this up to him a few days before the funeral, and he got mad, thinking I was accusing him of neglect, but I just wanted to understand. As for the funeral, they wanted to say I was on the list, then why couldn't I come in? I said there must be some kind of mistake, and they said no. He knew I was out there and told them to have me leave the property. Does that sound like I was just late, or does it sound like he didn't want me there at all? If he was a decent person, he could've made sure I at least got to say my goodbyes to him. I begged him to do something. He was cremated yesterday, and the funeral was Saturday. He said it's not his problem. He knew what he was doing. I don't care how much I don't like someone; there are certain lines I would never cross. I'm not the type of person who wants to see someone suffering, and I'll never understand that type of evil. He needed my signature to cremate Weston, he has no problem taking child support from me, but yet he says I'm not his mother. I apologize for ranting and this is all I will speak on it but I'm tired of screaming in silence. All I wanted was to have my alone time with him to say goodbye, a lock of his hair and some his ashes. He has ignored my messages since the funeral.
