

The past week has been a pretty terrible week on all accounts. The media has done nothing but make it far worse than it needed to be. I mistakenly posted my private business between my husband and I on social media. I never post anything about my personal life publicly. I posted it and took it all down within 35 minutes. I never expected them to take those screenshots and run with it. I am not a person who I figured they would even care to write about. I am a nobody. I left LA because I wanted nothing to do with the world of try hards and attention seekers to find myself at the center of the very thing I hate the most.

Yes I filed for divorce.. the next day I filed a non suit to stop the divorce.

I love Jesse so much and was very hurt by what I saw when I went through his phone. In his defense and the reason I am back home is that he didn't say anything inappropriate he didn't talk about "having sex or meeting up with anyone". That's why I am here working out the marriage that I believe in. There are things in the world with much more importance than our lives. I understand tabloids are a business.. that's clear by using his exes as headlines to drive traffic and salacious stories to further damage peoples lives. I appreciate everyone reaching out to check on me, but I am fine. Everything was blown out of proportion to a degree that it didn't need to go.

I would like to have peace in this time as I work on my relationship with my husband. There's nothing more to it. The media finds it necessary to report on trash gossip rather than actual news that is important to the American public. We have so many more important things to worry about, and they shouldn't be wasting resources on us.

Thankfully everything is back to status quo over here. I would appreciate an end to all of this.

I'm pregnant and I would like to be able to focus on that without the stress of the outside world making it more difficult to have a healthy pregnancy.
