

January 20, 2010

Conan O'Brien
c/o The Tonight Show

Dear Conan:

It has come to our attention, through scouting contacts as well as through Craigslist, that both you and Andy Richter may be available over the next several months. If so, we hope you will consider our offer to join the world famous Washington Generals for the remainder of our 2010 North American tour, and help us in our quest to finally end our 13,000-game losing streak against the Harlem Globetrotters.

With your height, and Andy's lane-clogging potential, we feel confident you would both be able to make an impact for us. And while we can't guarantee immediate wins, I offer you my guarantee as team owner and president that you'll have the time slot of your choice to play in every game, plus your choice of Los Angeles (at the STAPLES Center on February 14) or New York (at Madison Square Garden on February 12) for your first shows with us.

Assuming you are interested, please call my director of player personnel, Marcus Spencer ([REDACTED]) to discuss this further or to address any questions you may have.

From one redhead to another, I'm hopeful we can make this happen. We can drop Andy from this offer if it helps.

Sincerely,

Red Klotz

President, Washington Generals